AN EXTRACT OF A LAW For the REGULATION of CHIMNEY-SWEEPERS.

THAT no persons shall follow the business of Chimney-Sweepers, either by themselves or their servants, negroes or others within the city of Philadelphia, the district of Southwark, or the township of the Northern Liberties, without having first made application to the officer herein after directed to be appointed, and having registered or caused to be registered his or their names, and the names of their servants, negroes, or others; as aforesaid, with a number affixed to each and every such name in a book by the aforesaid officer to be kept for the purpose, and without procuring and receiving from the said officer a certificate of every such registry, containing the number and name of every person so entered, under the penalty of ten shillings for every day he shall follow by himself or cause to be followed by his servants, negroes, or others, the said business, which said certificate the said officer is hereby enjoined and required to make out under his hand, and to deliver to the person or persons who shall apply for the same; and for every such registry and certificate he shall receive the sum of seven shillings and six pence and no more.
That every person following the business aforesaid within the said city, district, and liberties, shall (if he follows the employment himself) wear or (if he employs his servants, negroes or others) cause to be worn on the front of their caps in full view, without concealment, the same names and figures respectively, as shall be so aforesaid entered in the said book, and cont. in his or their respective certificates, and none other; in large figures, not less than two inches in length to be made of strong durable tin or copper; and the persons following the said business by themselves, or their servants, negroes, others, &c. not having the said number fixed on his or their caps according as the law directs; or when fixed, shall willfully deface or conceal the same, or shall neglect to keep them visible, shall for each and every such offence, forfeit and pay the sum of ten shillings for each and every day that he or they shall follow the said employment, not wearing, or on wearing so wear the said number as aforesaid.

That if any person or persons undertaking the occupation aforesaid, shall not, within 48 hours, after application to him or them made by any of the inhabitants of the said city, district, or Northern Liberties, sweep or cause to be swept, such chimney or chimneys as he or they shall be required to sweep, every such person or persons so offending shall forfeit and pay the sum of twenty shillings.
That if the chimney of any person or persons within the said city, district, or liberties, shall take fire and blaze out of the top, the same not having been swept within the space of one calendar month, next before the time of taking such fire, every such person or persons shall forfeit and pay the sum of 40 shillings—and if any chimney shall take fire and blaze out at the top; the same having been swept within one calendar month from the time of taking such fire, the person who swept the same either by himself, his servants, or negroes, shall forfeit and pay the sum of 40 shillings.
A book for the registering of Chimney-sweepers is now kept by JOHN HAINES, as directed by law, at the corner of Cherry Alley and Fifth street.

THE TRIMMER.

A canting Trimmer came to me and said,
"I fear my friend you are too rank a Fed;
"Till the Jacobins, think how hard their case is,
"By disappointments stretch'd, how long their faces;
"Emollients better suit with our condition."
Jack Ketch said I'm an excellent physician.
"What thirst for blood?"—not I Sir, as I breathe—
"Why hanging is a fine dry kind of death."
"We moderates are for holding all things even."
You mean like him who hangs twixt earth and heaven.
"Phaw no; the French spill blood enough already."
Aye, aye; yet you're for holding all things steady.
Now if the weight is all on one side brother,
You trimmers may to poize it hang on t'other.

These trimmers in their middle way of fleeing Are neither black nor white, nor beef nor herring.
Nor Feds nor Jacobins, nor this nor that,
Nor birds nor beasts, but just a kind of bat
Or twilight reptile, true to neither cause,
With FEDERAL WINGS, but 'Jacobs' teeth and claws.

STEADY.

MR. FENNO.

THE following extract of a message to the Legislature of South Carolina from Charles Pinckney, Esq. late governor of that State, and recently elected one of its Senators, is worthy of attention on more accounts than one. It explains the reason why the Legislature of a State which has given so many recent and decisive proofs of federalism, should have sent to the Senate of the United States, a person formerly considered as a thorough-going antifederalist; and it affords a security for the conduct of that gentleman on all questions relative to defensive preparation and French affairs. It also proves the state of public opinion to the southward, where no man, if opposed by a character of any respectability, can be elected without an explicit avowal of correct sentiment on these important points. The Message was sent about the fifth of this month, at the commencement of the session.

EXTRACT.

"On the French Republic refusing to receive our envoys, and to enter into negotiations on the just, honorable and amiable principles of their instructions, you will certainly view with approbation the measures which have been taken for protecting our commerce, and placing us in the best possible state of preparation to resist the invasion, which at that time it was the general opinion threatened some part of the United States. On this subject I am sure there can be but one opinion, and that our citizens would never approve of any negotiation incompatible with the rights, the honor, or the real independence of their country; and that to support these, however great the burthens may be, they will bear them without a murmur."

"While however, a determination to maintain our national character unshaken, ought always to govern the councils of the union, should the French Republic officially, and in a proper manner, communicate to them a determination to treat upon terms consistent with our rights and honor, there can, I should suppose, be no doubt that we shall seize with avidity and pleasure the opportunity of evincing to the world, that while jealous of its character, and determined to protect its rights, the American government will always prefer honorable peace to war: that separated by an ocean of great extent from the territories of the old world, it is its earnest wish to keep apart from its politics: that devoted as they are to the peaceful pursuits of agriculture and commerce, they will be as unwilling to interfere with the rights and concerns of other nations, as determined that none shall guide or influence their own: that it will be their policy to have no too intimate connection, by treaty of alliance with any power: to remember that our nation, with respect to its commerce, must depend upon itself: that they should make such regulations as are best suited to our situation, the nature of our riches and the industry of our inhabitants: that having done so, our policy would consist in the resolution never to derogate from them in favor of strangers. With this conduct, there can be no doubt of our easily preserving peace with every nation governed by the principles of justice. Our commerce is too lucrative, and our ports and supplies too convenient and important to the powers possessing valuable islands in the West Indies, to render our friendship or hostility indifferent to any of them. They well know the consequences of four weight being thrown into an opponent's scale, and in proportion as our maritime force increases, with the danger of foreign wars lessens. With this policy, and with that mildness in our manner, and firmness in our measures, which never fail to give true dignity to the councils of a nation, I have no doubt of the peace of our country being long maintained: that on its being preserved, even for a few years, the increase of its resources and power will be such, as to render it not only invulnerable to foreign attacks, but to make it the interest of every people to court its commerce and friendship, and to place it among the most envied seats of freedom and true happiness in the world: that it may be so is my most sincere prayer."

Gentle Boarding & Lodging.

SEPARATE and ready furnished apartments with gentle Boarding and Lodging for the accommodation of four Gentlemen (with their Ladies, if required) may be had at No. 163, Arch Street, Dec. 14.

From the VIRGINIA GAZETTE.

The following COUNTER MEMORIAL was read on Tuesday last, at Caroline Court-house, where it procured sundry signatures, and is now circulating through the county for more. It will be forwarded as soon as possible to Richmond, and presented to the General Assembly.

WHEN attempts are made, whether open or covert, foreign or domestic, which have a tendency to pull down the constitution and trample under foot the laws of a free country, good men deem it sacrilege not to stand forth and resist them. If a constitution, not forced upon them by compulsion, but adopted by themselves voluntarily and of their own accord, if laws, not imposed by the will of a tyrant, but enacted by their own representatives fairly and freely chosen, are not to be held sacred by a people professing the principles and virtues of republicans, the republican system must soon vanish, like a pleasing dream, and after passing through all the horrors of anarchy and confusion, leave its deluded votaries doomed to the darkness of eternal despotism.

We, freeholders and inhabitants of the county of Caroline, regretting the cause that brings us, come before this honorable body to enter our protest against a memorial which we understand has been presented to you, without the signatures, but under the sanction of a small part of our fellow-citizens, and which, in our opinions, has the fatal tendency above spoken of. This memorial was presented and voted for on the same day, without being previously submitted to the consideration of the people. Not one in ten had ever seen it, or even heard it read, except in the curfew and confused manner of reading papers amidst the noise and bustle of a court-yard. Under such circumstances it was impossible to form a right judgment of it, and upon this ground it was especially objected to, on a closer inspection and better intelligence of its contents, we are firmly persuaded that some worthy men, who gave their votes in favor of it, would have rejected it, and that very few could have been found who would have deliberately set their names to it. Yes! representatives of the people, we must do our country the justice to believe, that an instrument so preposterous and unfounded in point of matter, so fantastic in style, and so ungrammatical withal, would not have been suffered to escape from us, to the reproach of its reputation for patriotism, and to the discredit of its literary character. In this event your wisdom and public virtue would not have been insulted, your correct taste and judgment would not have been disgraced.

Filled with low insinuations and indecent allusions against the government of the United States, the said memorial affects to reprobate all the defensive measures which have been adopted with respect to France, particularly the army establishment, the direct taxes, the alien and sedition laws. These subjects, we know full well, have been selected, not for their merits, but because they were best calculated to inflame the minds of the people and to excite discontents. The people, however, are now beginning to see through all the Parisian arts and artifices that are practised to deceive them. The people, know that an army (proportioned to exigencies) is at all times necessary to protect our frontiers from the savage Indians, and particularly, at this time, to defend us against the more savage tyrants of France. The people know that taxes are necessary to support that army, the people know that both to their present extent, are only temporary, the people know that their own representatives, in whom they confide, have voted for both, under a conviction of their necessity, the people know that when the necessity ceases they will cease, for they know that whatever falls heavily upon them must, in like manner, fall heavily on their representatives, when they return to a private station. The people knowing all these things are not to be seduced into sedition and insurrection; for to this length the memorial, against which we are now protesting, goes, if it has any meaning. What else we beg leave to add can be intended by the following sentence with which it concludes. "What then is to be done? Will the representatives of the people sit quietly and await the blow, or will they act like men & maintain rights derived from God acknowledged by compact? Could any person be so idle as to imagine that your honorable body would be led by this bombast into such rash and intemperate acts as should compel the union to take steps for the suppression of an insurrection in Virginia countenanced by the Legislature itself? We blush for this part of the memorial, which has excited a mixture of indignation and contempt wherever it has been read, and pass on to a closer view of the direct taxes.

The taxes laid by the federal government, though wisely calculated to fall on the rich, and not on the poor, have been always objected to by a certain description of antifederal characters amongst us. Some few years ago, a great noise was made about the carriage tax, upon the pretended ground of its being unconstitutional. The objectors refused to pay it. Reform was had to the courts, and they were compelled to do justice to their country. In their opposition to this tax, they were not supported by the people, who, when they came to understand it, were forcibly struck with its wisdom and equity, and highly approved of it. So too will they approve of the new taxes, when they are told that these also, like the carriage tax, are laid upon expence and not on capital, that the burthen falls upon those who are best able to bear it, and in proportion to the ability of all, that in case of distress for non-payment, beasts of the plough, arms, household furniture, and the necessary apparel of the family, are all exempt from seizure, that they are laid only for one year, and are not intended to be permanent; that they would not have been necessary, had not the conduct of the French directory compelled us to arm, and that the money is not to be employed in paying tribute to a foreign nation, for the purpose, among other things of bribing traitors in some countries, to rebel against their respective governments, but in defending our wives and lives, our religion and morals, our constitution and laws, our liberty and independence. For the preservation of these same blessings, the alien and sedition laws were passed, which constitute a wise part of the general system of defence. These were calculated to operate against the hostile machinations and intrigues of spies and incendiaries well known to be in us against the secret, as the army and navy call these measures unconstitutional then, and nature, has forced us to adopt, is to lay that when the detected dagger of the assassin is just about to be plunged into our hearts it would be unnatural to seize the caustic by the throat and smite him to the ground. The policy and constitutionality of these laws have been so clearly and so convincingly demonstrated by various publications, as to supercede the necessity of any argumentative detail on our part.

In the aforesaid memorial we read the following coarse, crude and jargonical sentence. "Symptoms of an alliance with a monarchy, our old foe—and, a war with a republic, our old friend, and a co-habitation of Tories, refugees and emigrants, monarchists with the administration, as monstrous as coteries, are additional solutions of intention; they portend that the American revolution is to be from anarchy to monarchy."

If there be any citizen mad and daring enough to entertain views of assimilating our federal constitution to monarchy, (as the foregoing quotation announces) he should be pointed out, that the folly of his impracticable schemes may be exposed and punished. If bad men are indeed plotting against the State, those whose business it is to inform the people of such plots, should speak out. But if any official character, whether he be a member of the federal government, or of your honorable body, or of any other State government in the union, shall venture to make such insinuations, without openly mentioning names, and boldly explaining the ground of his accusations, he ought to be held in detestation and abhorrence, as a back-biter and a slanderer, as a wicked and envious wretch, who willing to be consequential without merit, is endeavoring to pull down all those who are so with it, as a man having the seeds of slavery sown within himself—for none but such a one could insult the sense and spirit of the people, by supposing them capable of submitting to slavery.

Anxious to avoid odious distinctions, we did not wish to take a comparative view of the characters generally throughout America, who advocate the federal administration, and of those who oppose it. We appeal, however, to your honorable body, and to the world, whether we are not goaded to it by the language of the memorial against which we are now protesting, and whether it does not justify the keenest and most caustic animadversions. We are willing to allow that there may be found amongst the friends of government, some suspicious and even bad men; but it must be conceded that, in general, they are composed of the good and wise, the honest and industrious, the patriotic and brave, with our virtuous WASHINGTON at their head.

Amongst those who are opposed to government, we admit that some well meaning men may be found; yet, it cannot be denied, that we may also find others of a contrary cast. But, our respect for your honorable body, and our regard for decorum, forbid us to retort as we could, or to make any further observations on the very extraordinary memorial, which has been presented to you:—We only pray, therefore, that after giving it a patient and respectful hearing, you will postpone the farther consideration of it, till the third Monday in March next.

Permit us to conclude with a hope, that you will adopt the amendments to the federal constitution, which have been lately proposed, for the purpose of excluding foreigners from the councils of the United States.

COMMUNICATION.

To MEDICUS.

Sir,
If you had waited with patience till I had finished my sketch relative to the origin of the Yellow Fever, which has occasioned such mortality and distress of late years in this country, I think you would have spared your censoriousness, unless you are actuated by a very litigious spirit.

If you had intended I should have profited by your advice, you would have written in the language of a gentleman, and have treated me with the civility and politeness that ought to distinguish a professional character.

If truth and the welfare of your fellow-citizens had been your aim, would you not have been more correct in your statements, as well as more mild in your expressions?

If the society of young gentlemen who file themselves the Academy of Medicine, (and who, having very little or no practice to attend to, assemble frequently together for the laudable purpose of conversing together on the difficulties they meet with from the "Scoff of Pride, from Envy's frown and Poverty's unconquerable bar,") say, what you say for them, that the Yellow Fever may be both generated and imported, they are guilty of a very palpable incongruity; for in their last letter addressed to the Governor, they assert, that it is not contagious in the West-Indies; and if that is the case, how can it be imported? Some of them go farther—they even deny its being contagious here, in opposition to facts known to every body else.—They also "deprecate, in the most solemn manner, the continuance of a belief in the supposed importation of the fever, as it has (according to them) led to a total neglect of the proper means of preventing its return."—[See their letter.]

If, as is known to every inhabitant of this city, that has paid any attention to the subject, cases of Bilious Fever have become manifestly fewer, and milder in their symptoms, after paying of the streets became general, and after the dock was arched over, and regulations of general cleanliness were established, how do those distinguished physicians, whom you say mature observation has convinced that the Yellow fever is only a higher grade of Bilious fever, (and which the Academy says is derived from the exhalations of the gutters of the streets) account for their having become contagious, and of having assumed such an aggravated and horrible form? for according to every principle of sound reason, the causes ought to have been aggravated, not moderated, to produce such aggravated and extraordinary effects.

But, the Bilious Fever does not in any country, like the Yellow Fever, after continuing without interruption for three or four days, cease of a sudden in the generality of cases, (the patient remaining easy and tranquil for several hours,) and then return with an increase of violence and with additional symptoms; and in cases that end fatally, conclude the catastrophe with a vomiting of matter as black as ink. Nor do dissections demonstrate a mortification of the stomach and total obstruction of the gall ducts in fatal Cases of Bilious Fever, as they do in the Yellow Fever.

If you had paid attention to what I had published when you undertook to prove by anticipation, that I knew nothing about the subject, and might do mischief by lessening this confidence in the effects to be expected from the introduction of water into the city, you would have perceived that I am an advocate for it; as I believe keeping the streets clean and cool, would render the air less favorable for the retention of contagion and the propagation of contagious diseases.

The College has also uniformly recommended the strictest attention to this subject, and have repeatedly advised the Legislature to establish regulations to guard not only against importation, but to make such arrangements in the police, as might retard the operation of contagion, when introduced by importation, as may be seen in their proceedings, already published.

If you had been acquainted with the proceedings of that respectable body, which consists of all the Senior, most experienced and best informed Physicians in this city, you would not have asserted that "the Legislature is now in possession of all the information which the Academy or the College of Physicians are able to communicate" for if I am not mistaken, (and I have had access to the most authentic sources of information) the College is now preparing a narrative of facts and observations, respecting the important subject, to present to that enlightened body.

As it is of the first importance to ascertain the origin of the disease in question, before we can have any knowledge, effectual regulations for guarding against its return will never be established, and as it is highly interesting to the community at large that it should be ascertained; if you should think proper to discuss the subject in that decent and dispassionate manner which becomes a gentleman and a man of sense, I am ready to join issue with you. And am your humble servant.

(And in reality)

A REGIMENTAL SURGEON.

CONGRESS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 27.

Mr. Otis said, the committee to whom was referred the bill for amending the Stamp Act, with respect to the duty payable on foreign bills of exchange and bills of lading, had received information from the Commissioner of the Revenue, stating that it would be necessary to provide some compensation for the supervisors, who had the management of the stamp business, as the present law provides none. The committee had also suggested the propriety of making some other alterations in the bill; he therefore moved that the committee of the whole be discharged from the further consideration of this bill with a view of having it re-committed to the select committee who reported it.

The motion was carried, and the bill was re-committed. Mr. Otis afterwards made a report of the proposed amendments; but owing to some informality, the report was not received.

The bill providing for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States, was read the third time and passed; as was also the bill respecting balances reported to be due from certain states, by the Commissioners for settling the accounts between the United States and the several states, 55 votes being in favor of its passage.

Mr. Thatcher, from the committee of revision and unfinished business, made a report of the expiring laws, which was ordered to be printed.

The Speaker was proceeding to take the sense of the House on proceeding with the unfinished business of yesterday, viz. the Bankrupt bill; when,

Mr. Sewall moved to postpone this subject till to-morrow, in order to consider the amendment yesterday proposed by his colleague and this morning laid upon the desk.

The motion being agreed to,

Mr. Griswold called up for consideration the resolution which he yesterday laid upon the table for the appointment of a committee to consider the propriety of amending the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States, so as to provide a penalty for any citizen who shall usurp the Executive authority of this government, by commencing or carrying on, any correspondence with government of any foreign prince or state, relative to controversies or disputes, which do or shall exist between such prince or state and the United States.

The resolution having been read,

Mr. Nicholas said, he believed this to be a new subject of general legislation; and, as he did not apprehend there was any necessity for making the proposed inquiry; and, if it had any particular object in view, the motion appeared to him premature. If it was founded upon what had been seen in the public papers relative to the conduct of a certain gentleman who has lately been in France, he thought the mover ought to have waited until the President of the United States had put the house in possession of facts on this subject; which, though promised three weeks ago, had not yet been received. Indeed, he did not know but the conduct of this house in giving an opinion upon these dispatches, before they are received, had prevented the communication; and if the house should proceed to legislate upon them, the President may suppose they have no desire to see what he has promised to lay before them, and withhold them altogether. If any particular object has given occasion to this new kind of legislation, the house ought to know it. He had hoped that no change had taken place in the affairs of this country with respect to foreign nations, which could have directed the attentions of gentlemen to any particular person. He had hoped things were mending, and he had gathered these hopes from the address of the President at the opening of the session, as in that address, he seemed to wish to argue down the too sanguine hopes of a speedy reconciliation which might arise from the communication which he had made on the subject. This was not only the impression which the address had made upon his mind, but it was, as far as he had learnt, the general impression. Indeed, he found a different tone even amongst those gentlemen who had always been the loudest in their cry for war, from what existed when he last parted with them. Nothing was then heard, but a declaration of war—now he heard nothing of the kind. Thinking, therefore, as he did, that the subject is of too novel a kind for general legislation, without some good reason being assigned for it, and that the house does not possess sufficient information, if the measure be levelled at a particular object, he was opposed to the motion.

Mr. Griswold said, the gentleman from Virginia had mistaken the object of this resolution, in supposing it had reference to any particular person. Its object, said Mr. G., is general, and I think of the first importance. I think it necessary to guard, by law, against the interference of individuals in the negotiation of our executive with the governments of foreign countries. The present situation of Europe, in his opinion, calls aloud for a regulation of this kind. He did not know but an interference of this kind might have already taken place; but the object of this motion was prospective, and had nothing to do with what is past. If, said Mr. G., offences of this kind are to pass unpunished, it may be in the power of an individual to frustrate all the designs of the executive. The agent of a faction, if such a faction shall exist, may be sent to a foreign country to negotiate in behalf of that faction, in opposition to the executive authority, and will any one say, that such an offence ought not severely to be punished? It certainly ought. Placing the subject in this point of view, he thought it the duty of the legislature to enquire into it. He was not certain that adequate provision could be made for the punishment of offences of this kind, but he with the matter to go to a committee for consideration. He hoped no occasion would occur for bringing into operation a law of this kind; but if it should, it would be well to be prepared to meet it. He could not see why this should be considered as a subject of imitation, as no gentleman would pretend to say, that an unauthorized individual ought to exercise a power which should influence the measures of a foreign government with respect to this country. This power has been delegated by the constitution to the President; and, said Mr. G., the people of this country might as well meet and legislate for us, or erect themselves into a judicial tribunal, in place of the established judiciary, as that any individual, or set of persons should take upon him or themselves this power, vested in the executive. Gentlemen say, that all is right; but, in his opinion, such practices would be destructive of the principles of our government. He hoped, therefore, the resolution would be agreed to.

Mr. Nicholas had no idea that the gentleman from Connecticut could not mean to make his law retrospective; but he thought the house ought to possess more information on the subject, before they undertook to legislate upon it. The constitution having defined what reason shall be, he conceived it was not in the power of the legislature to create a new offence of this kind; and if it could, he thought it would be unnecessary. Whether the gentleman had any reference in what he said of a faction, to a faction existing at present in this country, he could not tell; he would say however, that if he had had any share in sending the gentleman alluded to, to France, he should not be ashamed to confess it; he should not be ashamed or afraid, to promote the peace of his country. Nor were it not for the apparent arrogance of such a step, should he himself be ashamed or afraid of crossing the Atlantic, if by doing so he could procure peace for his country. Nor did he think the People of America would be offended with him for this action. If, said Mr. N., all individual interference is to be prohibited, the President having declared all negotiation to be at the end, how is peace to be procured? Who, said he, are so likely to take a step in business of this kind as those who are to insure the enjoyment of peace? The mischief which gentlemen see in a conduct of this kind, he could not understand. If, said he, any individual or set of men were bent upon involving the country in war, the case would be very different. He could not consent to class the two descriptions of persons together.

[The remainder of this debate shall be given to-morrow. The other speakers for and against the motion were, Messrs Rutledge, Dana, Pinkney, Harper, and N. M. Nicholas. The debate continued till three o'clock, when Mr. Otis rose, but a motion being made to adjourn, the house adjourned, without taking a question upon the resolution.]

Our spirited and active Mayor has, within a few days, fined a great number of persons, under statute of corporation, for driving sleighs through the City without bells. This is mentioned as a caution to others, against a practice so obviously improper and dangerous.

The Vice President has at length taken his seat in the present session.

APPROPOS.

Observations made in the first Session of 1st Congress on the compensation to be allowed the VICE PRESIDENT.

Under the clause in the report, to allow the Vice President 3000 dollars per annum, a debate ensued—

Mr. White (Vice) said, he did not find any thing in the constitution authorizing a salary to that officer. He therefore moved that the sum should be struck out, and the clause so amended; as that the Vice President should receive daily pay as President of the Senate—in which capacity alone, he said, services could be exacted from him; and he could not consistently vote any allowance but for services actually performed. Sir, the constitution has not pointed out the Vice President as an officer to be provided for: it says, the President shall have a fixed and permanent compensation for his services, but is silent as to the Vice President. We are not authorized to institute sinecures for any man—Whether the Vice President may or may not pursue any other business, I will not pretend to say. He may, however, absent himself from the public service, and who can call him to account?

Mr. Sedgwick observed that the principle on which the motion of Mr. White was founded, did not appear to him to be just. The Vice President is an officer by the constitution, who in case of accident, is to take the chair and is to reside at the seat of government—from which it appears necessary that he should receive a permanent salary.

Mr. Seney—By the constitution, compensation is to be made for services performed. The Vice President may absent himself during the whole time. I am for giving him a handsome allowance, while employed, but I think he ought to be paid, per diem.

This morning, the Senate of this State, in a body, waited on the President of the United States, and presented the following ADDRESS.

To the PRESIDENT of the UNITED STATES.

THE Senate of Pennsylvania, sensible of your many arduous and important duties, would neither claim a portion of your time or attention, did they not consider it incumbent on them, at a crisis of our public affairs so interesting as now presents itself, to express the sentiments they entertain respecting the conduct of the French government, and the consequent measures adopted during your administration.

The people of the United States, attached to the French nation, and ardent in the cause of rational freedom, once found it difficult to refrain their sympathy and affection within the boundary, which is a neutral nation it was their duty to respect; even when reiterated injuries had, in some degree, awakened them to a consciousness of their own situation, their feelings were rather those of regret than of resentment: they believed, that the pressure of momentary circumstances, and the imperious impulses of necessity, had occasioned their sufferings, and were disposed to regard, with a friendly eye, the smallest advances towards a reconciliation.

The continued aggression of the French republic has rendered it impossible to remain under this delusion. Our government has been traduced and insulted in the seditious publications of the French agents in this country—The most flagrant attempts have been made to sow division among the people of the United States—Our commerce, carried on under the sanction of solemn treaties and the laws of nations, has been pillaged to an enormous amount—Our seamen have been ignominiously thrown into prison—Our officers of peace have been haughtily rejected, and our Envoys treated with contumely—Demands of tribute have been insolently made, and, in case of refusal, we have been threatened with the fate of nations which have been bartered away, or degraded from the rank of sovereign powers into the condition of vassals to the French republic. Under this accumulated oppression, acquiescence would have been inconsistent with our safety, and patience would have degenerated into pusillanimity. We contemplate, therefore, with the highest approbation, the wisdom with which you have foreseen the danger, and the firmness with which you have resisted its approach. Under an administration so well conducted, we entertain a firm reliance, that the people of these states may equally defy the poison of foreign intrigue, or the violence of foreign power.

That any change of men or measures, on our part, compatible with the dignity of an independent and self-governing nation, would have secured a continuance of harmony with the French republic, we regard as a fallacy, invented and propagated by designing men, too palpable to receive the assent of any whose minds have not been previously corrupted by prejudice, or obscured by ignorance—We rejoice to find that our constituents are fully aware of the pernicious tendency of foreign influence, and impress with the deepest detestation of the conduct of those who, by an officious interference in our foreign relations, have traitorously attempted to wrest the administration of our public affairs from the hands in which the constitution of our country, and the suffrages of a free and enlightened people, governed in their choice by a knowledge of tried virtue and eminent talents, have justly placed it.

Should an appeal to arms be found necessary, to preserve our liberty, or vindicate our rights, be assured, that the citizens of Pennsylvania, as they have eminently partaken the benefits resulting from the operation of the General Government, and are impressed with an unabated confidence in the virtue and intelligence of its administration, will not be found backward in hazarding their fortunes, and their lives, to ensure continuance to the one, and support to the other.

Independently of the personal esteem your private virtues command; as lovers of our country, we cannot but indulge ourselves in the pleasing hope, that you may long continue in the enjoyment of health; and be enabled, during many years, to fill your exalted station with undiminished honor to yourself, and increasing happiness to the American people.

(Signed)
ROBERT HARE, Speaker.

To which the PRESIDENT made the following REPLY:

To the SENATE of PENNSYLVANIA.

GENTLEMEN,
I FEEL myself under the strongest obligations to the Senators of Pennsylvania for this excellent address, in which, with no less wisdom and precision, than gravity and dignity, they have expressed the sentiments they entertain, respecting the conduct of the French government, and the consequent measures adopted during my administration.

It was not at all unnatural that the people of the United States should once have found it difficult, to refrain their sympathy with the French nation, within the boundary, which, as a neutral nation it was their duty to respect. Men who have once been under the hard necessity of having recourse to resistance in arms, in opposition to their own established habits of obedience, in defence of their own rights, are apt to feel a veneration for all men, who think themselves so much aggrieved as to be obliged to draw their swords in defence of what they esteem their rights, without enquiring at first very minutely, whether rightfully or not.

Without entering into any investigation at present, concerning the rectitude of the measures taken at the commencement of the late revolution in France, and whatever may be the judgment of history, it is scarcely possible at this day for any man whose impartiality is not wholly absorbed by passion and prejudice, to mistake in their judgments of the late conduct of the French republic, towards many other nations as well as our own. There is but little difference of sentiment at this moment in Europe or America.

Whether any change of men or measures on our part would have secured a continuance of harmony with the French republic, even at the expense and hazard of a certain war with her enemies, may be conjectured from the effects of changes of men and measures, made under her dictates, in all the republics of Europe, which have fallen victims to their complacence.

I rejoice with you to find, that your constituents are fully aware of the pernicious tendency of foreign influence, and impressed with the deepest detestation of the conduct of those, who, by an officious interference in our foreign relations, have so presumptuously attempted to wrest the administration of our public affairs from the hands in which the constitution of our country, and the suffrages of a free people, have placed it.

Your acknowledgements that the citizens of Pennsylvania have eminently partaken the benefits resulting from the operation of the general government, and are impressed with an unabated confidence in its administration, are as honorable to that government, as your decided assurance, that should an appeal to arms be found necessary, to preserve our liberty and vindicate our rights, they will not be found backward in hazarding their fortunes and lives, are honorable to themselves.

The testimony of the Senate of Pennsylvania, of their personal esteem for my private character, as it is highly honorable to me, has excited a tender sensibility, and requires my most respectful thanks. May you long continue gentlemen, in the enjoyment of health, and during many years to fill your high stations with honor to yourselves, and increasing happiness to the people of Pennsylvania in particular and the union in general.

JOHN ADAMS.

December 28, 1798.

Extract of a letter from an American in Spain, dated October 9, 1798, to his friend in Philadelphia.

"The crews of French privateers love plundering better than fighting, has been demonstrated on several late occasions. One privateer has lately returned to St. Sebastian, with the captain, first lieutenant, and seven men killed, and in a very shattered condition; while the American armed merchant vessel which had been attacked by the privateer pursued her voyage. On the 30th of September, ten American vessel failed together from Malaga, while the French privateers in that port did not dare to molest them."

Extract of a letter from Lexington, dated December 7th, 1798.

"A meeting of the Demo's was called, a few nights ago, at Tilton's, to receive Logan's report of his mission to France; the meeting being composed chiefly of young friends, it is believed to have been a contrivance of Dickinson's, that they may cry 'blessed are the peacemakers.'"

Poole, Star and the rest are highly pleased with the mission, and believe the exertions of their envoy to have been highly useful.

Logan told them, if the difference between this country and France was not accommodated, it would be the fault of this government, and not of the Directory; he acknowledged he had letters from the Vice to persons of distinction there, and said if you Republicans would address a petition to the French Directory, you would get what you please to ask—He soon found he had gone too far, and observed he meant the government of the United States. Thus much has leaked out."

MARRIED!—last evening, by the Rev. Doctor Ewing, Mr. ANDREW CALDWELL, of this city, to Miss KELLY, of the state of New-Jersey.

GEORGE DAVIS'S LAW-BOOK STORE,
No. 319 HIGH STREET,
Latest London & Irish Editions.
GEORGE DAVIS'S Fall Importation is now arranged of which a more capital collection he believes was never offered for sale either in this City, London or Dublin. It combines almost every book in, with several valuable books out of print. Davis's confining himself to the sale of Law-Books only, it will appear obvious to professional Gentlemen, the advantages they have both in selection and price by purchasing from him.

His Catalogues being ready, gentlemen will particularly oblige him by calling for them—and to those residing at a distance, by favoring him with their address (post-paid) they shall be sent.

JOHN A. SHAEFFER, of Philadelphia, who has for a few years past been in the southern States, has had the opportunity to draw several Bills of Exchange on Timothy Pickens, Esq. Secretary of State, and myself, and by that means has defrauded a number of persons of their money, deceiving them by an exhibition of letters and papers with the names of said distinguished public characters, and renewable merchants highly recommended by said Shaeffer; to one of these papers I find my name subscribed, but I do not know the man; there are villainous forgeries! To prevent further imposition, I have to request the printers of Newspapers in the United States to publish this for the benefit of their fellow-citizens.

Valuable Property for Sale.
FOR SALE,
THAT well known Estate, called SHREWSBURR FARM, formerly the residence of General John Cadwaladar, situate on Saffarsa River, in Kent county, Maryland, containing about 1900 acres of prime LAND, upwards of 500 of which are in woods. The Buildings are all excellent, and consist of a handsome Dwelling House, two large Barns with Cow houses, Stables for fifty horses, a spacious treading floor under cover, a granary, two Overseer's houses, two ranges of two story buildings for Negroes (one of them new and of brick), Corn houses a Smoke house, &c. &c.—The whole Estate being nearly surrounded by water, it requires but little fencing, and has a good Shad and Herring fishery. It is conveniently situated for both the Philadelphia and Baltimore markets, with two landings on a navigable river but a short sail from Baltimore. There is a large Peach, and two large Apple Orchards on the premises; also, a variety of excellent fruits of different kinds. The soil is mostly a rich loam.—The whole will be sold together or divided into smaller farms (for which the buildings are conveniently situated) as may suit the purchaser. The Stock on said Farm, consisting of Horses, Cattle, Sheep &c. will also be disposed of.—
For further particulars apply to GEORGE HASTINGS on the premises, or to the subscriber, in Philadelphia.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED,
By WILLIAM YOUNG,
Corner of Chestnut and Second Streets,
JOAN OF ARC,
An Epic Poem,
By Robert Southey, with notes.

"WE do not hesitate to declare our opinion that the poetical powers displayed in it are of a very superior kind—Conceptions more lofty and daring, sentiments more commanding, and language more energetic, will not easily be found:— nor does scarcely any part of it sink into languor, as the glow of feelings and genius animates the whole. The language is, for the most part, modelled on that of Milton; and not infrequently, it has a strong relish of Shakspeare."

Monthly Review, vol. 19, p. 361.

A HISTORY, OR ANECDOTES OF THE REVOLUTION IN RUSSIA,
IN THE YEAR 1762.

Translated from the French of M. de Rulhiere.
With an elegant Head of the late Empress.
[The second edition, price 75 cents.]
"The grounds of M. de Rulhiere's information seem indisputable, and his readers appear to have every reason to be satisfied with his discernment; in unfolding the motives and circumstances that concurred in bringing about this striking event."
"We shall only add, that we have seldom met with more interesting original anecdotes, than those that are contained in the little work which we have now reviewed."
